PREFACE.

MAIN

THIS Dictionary, although founded on that of Dr. Webster, is not to be regarded as a mere reprint of any of the abridgments of the labours of that eminent lexicographer; for the Editor has not only rendered the work of another more accessible to the general public, but has also carefully brought it into conformity to the prevailing usage of the present day, and endeavoured to improve it in its various departments.

I. The Vocabulary has been pruned of numerous scientific terms that never occur in general literature, and that will be found more appropriately defined in scientific treatises; and of antique words that are seldom employed in modern composition, and that will generally be found explained in glossaries affixed to the works in which they are used. Many words of both classes, however, that are of frequent occurrence, have been carefully retained, and not a few of recent introduction will be found in our pages.

II. With respect to the Definitions, Webster's Dictionary has deservedly taken a high place in the public estimation, and it has accordingly been generally, although not slavishly, followed, as the Editor's professional knowledge enabled him, in a careful revision, to add to the clearness of many of the definitions; and, in the case of the objects of natural history, to add a brief description, or to point out an analogy to some other object that might be better known. The most important words have not only been defined, but an attempt has also been made, although necessarily on a limited scale, to exhibit their meaning with greater precision in sentences or clauses.

III. To words thus defined, numerous Synonymous terms have been added—a conspicuous feature in Dr. Webster's Dictionary—but not generally found in similar works of this size. After a clear definition of a word has been given, others that resemble it in general signification are presented to the student, who may thus vary and enrich his diction, and render his composition more agreeable and expressive.

IV. The Discrimination of synonymous words has been carefully made in about eighteen hundred instances. This feature was first introduced into a general Dictionary by Barclay, and discriminations of this kind in many instances were felicitously accomplished by Webster; the same plan was still farther carried out by Goodrich, who availed himself of the valuable work of Crabb; and, while the fruit of their labours has enriched our pages, we have endeavoured to render them still more valuable. "One great object," says Professor Goodrich, "of these discriminations, besides affording aid in the exact use of terms, has been to awaken in young writers a desire for making similar distinctions themselves. Nothing could be more useful as a discipline of their mental powers, nothing more adapted to fix indelibly in their minds the true meaning of the terms they use, than to take up an exercise of this kind in a systematic manner and on a broad scale. To aid in this, a list is given of nearly all the words here discriminated. Let the teacher select a series of exercises for a class of advanced pupils—let those who are engaged in self-culture do it for themselves; and let the rule be, that the young writer shall first endeavour to distinguish for himself between the words selected; that he then turn to the discriminations here made, and bring them to the test of his own observation; and that he close by framing short sentences, in which the words discriminated are each of them used in their peculiar and appropriate sense. 'The great source of a loose style,' says Dr. Blair, 'is the injudicious use of synonymous terms;' the great remedy lies in such a course of exercises as is here proposed." In making these discriminations we have in several instances pointed out the difference of usage in Britain and America. Instances will occur under the respective vocables, and others of a similar nature will be found by examining the List of Synonymous Words.

V. Great care has been bestowed on the subject of Pronunciation. In this department Walker has chiefly been followed; but those changes that have taken place since his time have been pointed out, and further reference has been made to them in our Introduction. In cases of considerable difference, the preference has been given to that sanctioned by the most recent orthoepists; and, in some cases, in which decision was difficult, the different methods have been given, with the authority for each mode of pronunciation.

VI. What has been stated with regard to Orthoepy is true also in respect to Orthography. The spelling of the English language is far more unsettled and anomalous than those who have not investigated the subject can possibly be aware. Worcester has given a vocabulary of upwards of fifteen hundred words that are either of doubtful or various orthography; and states that in some cases the one orthography is nearly, or quite, as well authorised as the other. A few remarks on this subject will be found in another page, and, as there stated, the orthography of the present day has been exhibited in these pages, and variations, when important, have been carefully indicated. Dr. Webster endeavoured to carry out the acknowledged analogies of language; but in this country the changes suggested have not been adopted by our principal writers.

VII. The Appendix contains,

1. WALKER'S KEY TO THE PRONUNCIATION OF CLASSICAL AND SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES, with the improvements of subsequent writers on these subjects.
2. A VOCABULARY OF MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL PROPER NAMES, founded on Baldwin's Pronouncing Gazetteer, whose editor was Dr. Joseph Thomas, and will be of immense service to the student of Geography, or reader of History and Travels.
3. TABLES of the ABBREVIATIONS USED IN WRITING AND PRINTING.
4. A COLLECTION OF LATIN, FRENCH, AND ITALIAN WORDS AND PHRASES of frequent occurrence, with their translations.
5. A CONCISE ACCOUNT OF THE PRINCIPAL DEITIES AND HEROES OF ANTIQUITY, which will prove serviceable to readers of Ancient History and Heathen Mythology.
6. A SECOND APPENDIX of useful information to the Student of English.

The Editor confidently trusts that this Dictionary presents, in a convenient form, an amount of information that will essentially aid the student of English literature, and materially assist the reader of Ancient History or Modern Travels. The preparation of the work has occupied a length of time of which the Editor had formed no conception when he undertook it; and, when the amount of labour which it involves is estimated, and the minute manipulation required on the part of the printer is considered, it is hoped that indulgence will be extended to any error of judgment, or slip of inadvertency that may be discovered; for, while "every other author may aspire to praise, the xicographer can only hope to escape reproach."

KEY

TO THE SOUNDS OF THE POINTED LETTERS.

VOWELS.

REGULAR LONG AND SHORT SOUNDS.

LONG—Ā ā, as in fame; Ē ē as in met; Ī ī, as in fine; Ō ō, as in note; OO [Ger. U], as in moon;
Ū ū, as in mule; Ȳ ȳ, as in fly.
 SHORT—Ā ā, as in fat; Ē ē, as in met; Ī ī, as in fin; Ō ō, as in not; ŌŌ ōō (short oo), as in foot; Ū ū, as in but; Ȳ ȳ, as in any.

REGULAR DIPHTHONGAL SOUNDS.

PROPER DIPHTHONG OI or OY (unmarked), as in toil, join, foil, boy, coy, toy.
 PROPER DIPHTHONG OW (unmarked), as in now, plow. When irregular, the sound is marked, as in low, sŭw.
 PROPER DIPHTHONG OU (unmarked), as in pound. When irregular, the word is re-spelled, as in route (root).
 IMPROPER DIPHTHONGS. In these, the vowel which is sounded is marked, as in aim, clean, cail, people
 (but this is unnecessary in respect to ee, as in feel). Often they are re-spelled. So also of triph-thongs.

OCCASIONAL VOWEL SOUNDS.

Examples.

Ā as in care.....AIR, SHARE, PAIR, BEAR.
Ā Italian.....FATHER, FĀR, BALM, PĀTH.
Ā as in last.....ASK, GRASS, DANCE, BRANCH.
Ā as in all.....CALL, TALK, HĀUL, SWĀRM.
Ā as in what.....WĀN, WĀNTON, WALLOW.

Ē like ā.....TĒRE, HĒIR, WHĒRE, ĒRE.
Ē as in term.....VĒRGE, VĒRDURE, PRĒFER.

Ȳ like long e.....PĪQUE, MĀCHINE, MĪEN.
Ȳ as in bird.....FĪRM, VIRGIN, DĪRT.

Examples.

Ō like short u.....DŌVE, SŌN, DŌNE, WŌRM.
Ō like long oo.....PRŌVE, DŌ, MŌVE, TŌMB.
Ō like short oo.....WŌLF, WŌLSEY.

ŌŌ (short oo).....FŌOT, BŌOK, WŌOL, WŌOOD.

Ū long, preceded by r.....RŪDE, RŪMOUR, RŪRAL.
Ū like ŋŋ (short oo).....BŪLL, PŪT, PŪBE, PŪLL.

C c hard, like k.....CALL, CARRY.
CH ch (unmarked), like tsh.....CHILD, CHOOSE.
CH ch soft, like sh.....MACHINE, CHAISE.
CH ch hard, like k.....CHORUS, EPOCH.
G g hard (unmarked).....GO, GALLANT.
G g soft, like j.....GENTLE, AGED.
S s sharp (unmarked).....SAME, GAS.
S s soft, like z.....HAS, AMUSE.

Examples.

TH th sharp (unmarked).....THING, PATH.
TH th flat or vocal.....THINE, THEIR.
Nŋ like ng.....LONGER, CONGRESS.
PH like f (unmarked).....PHAETON, SYLPH.
QU like kw (unmarked).....QUEEN, INQUIRY.
WH like hw (unmarked).....WHEN, WHILE.
 * * The double accent ['], in such words as et'cious,
ficti'tious, &c., shows that the subsequent c or t
 has the sound of sh.

PRINCIPLES OF PRONUNCIATION,

WITH

REMARKS ON THE KEY.

VOWELS.

ACCENTED SYLLABLES.

§ 1. Every accented syllable has its vowels marked with the pointed letters of the Key. These will now be considered under three heads, viz., their long, their short, and their occasional sounds.

LETTER A.

§ 2. The regular long or name sound, marked \bar{A} \bar{a} , as in dāy, āim, &c.; heard also in pāin, break, veil, inveigh, whēy, &c.

NOTE.—This vowel is in most cases diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in \bar{a} annexed to its radical or initial sound, as in pay, where the y represents the vanish, as if printed paē.

§ 3. The regular short sound, marked \bar{A} \bar{a} , as in āt, cārry, tārriff; heard also in fāt, bāde, rāillery, &c.

NOTE.—This is a distinct element from the long \bar{a} . Its regular sound is so exceedingly short and close, that, perhaps, in no language but our own is there that complete shutting or stoppage of the sound at the moment of its utterance, which it represents.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF A.

§ 4. The sound of a before r in such words as care, fair, parent, marked \bar{A} \bar{a} . The letter e has the same sound in a few words, such as there, where, their, heir, &c.

Two errors in opposite extremes are here to be avoided: (1.) That of the vulgar, who pronounce careful, carful, &c.; (2.) That of some among the educated classes in the provinces, who pronounce pair, parent, &c., as if spelt pay'er, pay'-rent, &c.

Some have considered the a in care as a distinct element, corresponding substantially to the \bar{a} \bar{a} of the French. This correspondence is maintained by the French orthoepists, who say that our word mare has the same sound (except that we do not roll the r) with their word mère: our word pair with their word père; our word share with their word chère, &c., the sound of a in care, pair, &c., is rather more open than that of \bar{a} \bar{a} in the mouth of a Parisian.

Smart, however, does not admit the sound in question to be a distinct element; he maintains that it is truly our long a in fame, and owes all its peculiarity to the subsequent r. The sound of r in these words is what he calls a “guttural vibration” (see § 69)—a sound which he represents by ur, and Dr. Webster by er. In care we touch lightly on the a sound (the radical alone without the “vanish,” see § 2), and then pass fully and strongly into the guttural vibration (cāur or cāer), drawing the two as closely as possible into the same syllable—so closely that the r actually blends with the previous vowel. In like manner, parent is sounded pāur'ent or pāer'ent; and fairy has the sound of fā'er-y, as the word was actually spelt by Spenser in the title of his “Faery Queen.” It is important, however, not to dwell so long on the a as to produce the peculiarity of pay'rent, mentioned above. The true sound arising from the combination of the two is (in consequence of the opening power of the r) a decidedly open or broad one.* Smart refers also with approbation to another mode of identifying the sound in question, viz., that of prolonging our short e before r. Thus, ther (with the e as in then), drawn out into long quantity, gives us there; and er (the first syllable in error) gives us ere or e'er (äre), as heard in whene'er. Here, again, the caution will bear to be repeated, not to dwell too long on the slender sound of the vowel.† When, therefore, the long sound of a occurs before r, it appears to drop the terminal e and to retain only its radical sound; hence, in the opinion of several orthoepists, has arisen the necessity for using a distinctive mark for this a in such a position: in this work it has accordingly been marked \bar{a} . Should any one fail, however, to perceive the difference between the sound of a in pain, and that of the same letter in pare, he may regard them as identical, in conformity with the usage of most orthoepists.

§ 5. The sound of the Italian a, marked \bar{A} \bar{a} , as in äh, far, father; heard also in heärth, härrth, äunt, häunch, päth, psälm, äre, and gäpe—though the last word is now extensively pronounced gäpe, and is so marked by Smart and other recent lexicographers.

* Many accurate speakers pronounce the a in parent with rather more slenderness of sound than in pair, while they carefully avoid the extreme of pay'-rent. So also in transparent, and some other words.

† Many pronounce there, &c., with a sound rather more slender than they give to pair, being the same sound with that of parent, mentioned in the preceding note.

§ 6. The sound of a in certain words (chiefly monosyllables) ending in ff, ft, ss, st, sk, sp, with a few in nce and nt, marked À, as in staff, graft, pass, last, ask, gasp, chance, chant, &c.

NOTE.—Down to the close of the last century, words of this class were universally pronounced with the full Italian a. Some gave this too broadly or with a kind of drawl, so that Walker, having a prejudice against intermediate sounds, marked all such words in his dictionary with the sound of short a, giving pass the sound of pât, staff of Staffa (the island), &c. Jones, however, declared it to be “a mincing affectation; and Mitford said, “No English tongue fails to express, no English ear to perceive, the difference between the sound of a in passing and in passive. No colloquial familiarity will substitute the one for the other.” Still, the high character of Walker, and the increasing dislike for everything like a drawl in speaking, gave currency to the change. It prevailed in London, until there sprung up on both sides of the Atlantic what Smart has called a “new school” and an “old school” on this subject. The extreme shortness of the a, as marked by Walker, was still objected to; and Smart, in the first edition of his dictionary, published in 1836, censured Walker on this account, saying, “He allows no compromise between the broad Italian a, with which a vulgar mouth pronounces ass, and the sound narrower, (if possible) than the a in at, with which an affected speaker mimes the same word.” He, therefore, spoke of a “medium sound” of the a in words of this class, saying, “We are apt even in London, to give a slight prolongation to the vowel (à), which would, in other cases, be quite rustic.” It is a kind of drawl on the a in such words as last, pât, fast, &c. Custom, however, is considerably changed and Walker’s extreme short sound of staff, like Staffa, and of pass, like passive, is now generally adopted as the proper sound.

Still there is a disposition among literary men, and public speakers to unite on some intermediate sound between the entire broadness of the a in father, and the narrowness of the a in fat. Fulton and Knight introduced into their dictionary a shortened sound of the Italian a. They give the word “lard” as an example of the long Italian sound (as in father, &c.), and “last” of their short Italian sound; and mark with the latter the entire class of words now under consideration, such as staff, graft, pass, last, ask, gasp, and a few words in nce and nt, as dance and chant. In this way they guard against that undue prolongation of the a which offended Walker, and still retain in use one of the finest sounds of our language. This is the sound recommended in this work and marked À. Some might possibly prefer one a little less open, verging slightly more toward that of a in an; and there is certainly room here for a diversity of taste and practice among those who agree in the main point of rejecting the extreme shortness of Walker’s sound.

§ 7. The sound of broad a, marked À, as in awe, call; heard also in naught, taught, groat, &c.

NOTE.—This a has sometimes been called the German a, but is a broader sound, and is formed at a lower point toward the root of the tongue. It has a number of shorter sounds differing from it, not in quality, but in quantity, which will be mentioned in subsequent sections.

§ 8. The short sound of broad a, marked À, as in what, wallow, wash, &c.

NOTE.—This is the short sound of broad a, and coincides with the o in not. There is an intermediate sound of this a, as heard in salt, although, &c., which is neither so long as that in awe, nor so short as that in what, coinciding with the sound of o in nor. No distinctive mark is necessary to indicate this sound.

§ 9. RULE.—Words beginning in alt, like alternate,

&c., have the a short if derived from the Latin alter, as alternate, alteration, &c.; otherwise they have the a broad, as in altar, alteration, &c.

LETTER E.

§ 10. The regular long or name sound, marked Ê, as in mê, sê, sê, sê, &c.; heard also in hê, field, lê, lê, &c.

§ 11. The regular short sound, marked Ê, as in mêt, mêrry; heard also in feather, hê, lê, lê, &c.

NOTE.—This is not a short sound of the long e. Some have considered it as the shut or short sound of the a in fame; but others regard it as a distinct elementary sound.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF E.

§ 12. The sound of e like â (as in care, fair, bear, &c.), marked Ê, as in thêre, thêr, hêr, whêre, êre, ê, er, when, &c. This, as stated in § 4, is the same sound with that of a in care.

NOTE.—When there is an adverb of place, it should take this sound fully and distinctly, as “I shall be there” (thêre). When it serves merely to introduce a verb or sentence, it should be uttered lightly, with the sound of thêr (see § 13), as, “There (thêr) is no difficulty in the case.”

In like manner, their when emphatic, should take the full sound, as, “Their (thêir) interests, and not yours, are to be consulted.” When unemphatic, their should take the lighter sound, as, “They will not neglect their (thêr) interests.”

§ 13. The sound of short e before r, verging toward short u, marked Ê, as in hêr, têrm, vêrge, prefer.

NOTE.—The case here contemplated is that of er at the end of a word (as in her, defer), or followed by some other consonant besides r (as in term, nerve, mercy, maternal).

Uncultivated speakers give the e in such words the full sound of short u, as mercy, for mercy, term, &c. In a correct pronunciation, the organs are placed in a position for forming the short e, and then open instantly (as the sound begins to form) into the short u, thus making (as Smart observes) “a compromise between the two.”

LETTER I.

§ 14. The regular long or name sound, marked Î, as in pine, isle; heard also in height, aisle, oblige, microscope.

§ 15. The regular short sound, marked Î, as in pin, pit; heard also in sieve, since, been (bin), &c.

NOTE.—This is not a short sound of long i. Many have considered it as the shut or short sound of long e, but it is a distinct element, as may be perceived in the difference between heels and hills.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF I.

§ 16. The sound of i like that of long e, marked Î, as in marine, mien, machine, &c.

NOTE.—This is appropriately the sound of the French i, and most words which take it in English have been introduced from that language.

§ 17. The sound of short i before r, verging toward short u, marked Î, as in bird, virgin, &c.

NOTE.—I, in this case, is sounded by uncultivated speakers like short u, as virgin for virgin. It ought to commence with a very slight sound of short e, and then pass into that of short u. The observations made under § 13 as to short e in words like term, &c., apply to this sound of i.

LETTER O.

§ 18. The regular long or name sound, marked Ô, as in oh, mô, dôme; heard also in roam, course, yeoman, roll, port, door, &c.

NOTE.—This sound of o is diphthongal, having a slight “vanish” in oo annexed to the radical or initial sound, as in below, where the v represents the “vanish.” This vanish is omitted in unaccented syllables, as o-pin-ion, to-bac-oo, &c., but ought not to be omitted elsewhere.

§ 19. Our long o in such words as bôlt, côlt, dôlt, revôlt, revôler, &c., is not quiteso much protracted (owing to the effect of the t) as in hôld, bôld, be-hôld, &c., but the vanish ought not to be omitted—the true sound of the o should be preserved. This omission is characteristic of the provinces, but is entirely opposed to English practice. Few sounds will more readily strike a provincial than that of o in boat, as pronounced by a London waterman. There is a like error, very prevalent in the provinces, in respect to the following words, viz.: Home, hope, coach, coat, smoke, spoke, broke, stone, bone, road, whole, wholly, and perhaps some others. The o in these words is sounded without the vanish. All such words should have the full sound of the o as heard in accented syllables, though not in all cases with quite the same prolongation of the sound. But the full o of dome should be given to home; of slope to hope; of poach to coach; of boat to coat; of yoke to spoke, cloak, smoke, and broke; of hone to bone and stone. Hole and whole are identical in sound. As to holy and wholly, the vowel and middle consonant are more prolonged in the first than in the second.

§ 20. The regular short sound, marked Ö ö, as in nôrt, bônd; heard also in côral, Côrinth, tôrrént, ôrifice, &c.

NOTE.—This is the shut or short sound of broad a, and coincides with the a in what. There is a medium sound of this letter, as heard in nor, which is neither so short as in not, nor so long as in naught. This medium sound is usually given to the short o when directly followed by ss, st, and th, as in cross, cost, broth; also in gone, cough, trough, and some other words. To give the short sound to such words is affectation; to give them the full sound of broad a is vulgar.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF O.

§ 21. The sound of o like short u, marked Ô ô, as in dôve, lôve; heard also in dôes (duz), dône (dun), nône (nun), nôthing (nuthing).

NOTE.—The words combat and comrade are marked with this sound by many orthoepists, but there is equal or greater authority for the regular sound, cômbat and cômrade. The o in sovereign had originally this sound, but has in England, for the last twenty years, been gradually passing into the short o (sôvereign), until this is now the prevailing sound:

§ 22. The sound of o like oo long, marked Û û, as môve, lôse, whô, tô, &c.

§ 23. The sound of o like oo short, marked Q q, as in wôlf, Wôlsey, &c.

NOTE.—This sound coincides with that of u in bull, which is also used for oo short (see § 30).

LETTERS OO (German U).

§ 24. The regular long or open sound, represented by oo unmarked, as in moon, tool, moot, &c.

NOTE.—This sound, though represented by a double O, is regarded by all orthoepists as a distinct vowel sound. It is the same element with the u of the Germans and Italians, and coincides with the French ou in route.

§ 25. The regular short sound of oo, marked oo as in foot, book, wool, could, &c.

NOTE.—This sound is the one represented by y, as in full, bull, &c. (see § 30).

§ 26. The following words, root, roof, road, broom, and soon, have properly the long sound of oo as in moon (see § 24), but many pronounce them with the short sound, as given in § 25. The quality of the sound, however, in soon, should be the same as in moon, though the vowel is hardly so much prolonged in quantity, except in dignified discourse.

LETTER U.

§ 27. The regular long or name sound, marked Û û, as in unite, cûbe, mûte, &c.; heard also in feud, juice, beauty (bûty), &c.

NOTE.—This is a diphthongal sound, composed of the vowel oo, with a slight sound of the consonant y before it. When the u begins a syllable, this sound of y is clearly perceptible, as in the word unite, very obviously sounded yoonte. When the u is preceded by a consonant, the y has a less definite sound; but in most cases it may be clearly, though but slightly, perceived, as in mute, cûbe, &c.

§ 28. When the long u is preceded by the consonants d, t, l, n, and s, it is peculiarly difficult to introduce the sound of y, and hence negligent speakers omit it entirely, pronouncing duty, dooty; tune, toon; lute, loot; nuisance, noosance; suit, soot, &c. The reason is, that in forming those consonants the organs are in a position to pass with perfect ease to the sound of oo, while it is difficult in doing so to touch the intermediate y; hence the y in such cases is very apt to be dropped. Here arises one of the nicest points in our pronunciation, viz., to introduce the y, and yet avoid giving it too much breadth of sound. To say tube (tyoob), lucid (lyoocid), with the u as perfect (i. e., with as full a sound of the y) as in cûbe, cubic, mute, &c., is laboriously pedantic. The practice of good society is barely to insert the y in the lightest possible manner; thus we avoid the two extremes of overdoing on the one hand, by making too much of the y, and of wholly omitting it on the other.

It ought to be added that in such words as sure, &c., the y is always omitted, i. e., wherever the sound of sh precedes the u, as in sure, sounded shoor, sugar, shoogar, &c.

§ 29. The regular short sound, marked Û û, as in tûb, sûn, dûes (duz), blûd (blud), &c.

NOTE.—This is not the short sound of long u. It is a distinct element, and is formed furthest back in the throat of all the vowels; hence, unless well pronounced, it has an obtuse guttural sound.

OCCASIONAL SOUNDS OF U.

§ 30. The sound of u like that of short oo (oo), marked Û û, as in full, pull, bull, pût, &c.

NOTE.—Our long u, in unaccented syllables, has, to a great extent, this sound (oo) preceded by y, as in educate, pronounced ed'yoo-cate, &c. Hence, in repelling such syllables, the character y is employed in this work, as in nature, respelt nât'yûr; fortune, respelt fort'yûn, &c.

§ 31. The sound of long u (û), when preceded by r in the same syllable, marked Û û, as in rûde, rûby, rûral, &c.

NOTE.—All English orthoepists are agreed that the long u in this case drops its y, and becomes simply oo, so that rue is pronounced roo; rule, rool; ruby, rooby, &c.

LETTER Y.

§ 32. The regular long or name sound, marked Û û, as in ply, deify, &c.

NOTE.—The word my, when used without emphasis, takes its regular short sound, as, “I took down mý hat.” This sound, however, should not be given in serious or solemn discourse, nor should the y ever be turned into long e, as “I took down mee hat.”

REMARKS ON THE KEY.

§ 33. The regular short sound, marked \ddot{y} , as in tjrranny, &c.

NOTE.— \ddot{y} has only one occasional sound, viz., in such words as myrrit, in which it has, like the e and i in similar circumstances (see § 13 and § 17), very nearly the sound of short u . This is here indicated by respelling.

REGULAR OR PROPER DIPHTHONGS.

§ 34. OI or OY, as heard in join, boy, &c. These require no distinctive mark, having the same sound in all but four words, Shamois (shammy), choir (quire), tortoise (tortiz), turquois (sometimes pronounced turkeez).

§ 35. OW, as heard in cow, brown, flower, &c.

NOTE.—In a few words ow has the sound of long o . These are accordingly distinguished by the proper mark, as in blōw, słōw, knōw, &c.

§ 36. OU. This diphthong has two principal sounds:

(1.) That of ow in words derived from the Saxon, as in pound, round, &c.

(2.) That of oo in words derived from the French, as in soup, group, &c.

NOTE.—The word route, being directly from the French, has more commonly the French sound (root), while roul has the Saxon sound in ow. The word wound, which, from its Saxon origin, ought to have the sound of ow, has, to a great extent, taken the French sound (woond), notwithstanding the remonstrances of Walker and other orthoepists against the irregularity.

§ 37. The diphthong ow has also, in a few cases, the sound of the broad a , as in bought (bawt); sometimes that of the short \ddot{a} , as in adjourn (adjurn), and of oo (like wood) in the words could, would, should. These peculiarities are indicated in this Dictionary by respelling.

UNACCENTED SYLLABLES.

§ 38. When unaccented syllables end in a consonant, their vowel, if single, has its regular short sound, as in ds-sign', con'dict, con'fict, &c. But some words from the classics have the vowel long, as cantharides, and are so marked.

§ 39. When the unaccented syllable does not end in a consonant, two cases arise, viz.:

(1.) The syllable may end in a vowel, as in the words di-rect', de-mur', de-main', &c.

(2.) The syllable may end in a consonant, with final e mute at the close of words, as in ul'ti-mate, si'nite, rep'tile, &c.

The former of these will, for the sake of brevity, be called No. 1, and the latter No. 2. These will now be considered under each of the vowels.

LETTER A.

§ 40. No. 1. Here the final a has usually the shut sound of the Italian a , as in Cu'ba, a-muse', A-mer'-i-ca, &c. But in some words, like a-e'-ri-al, chā-otic, &c., the a has the long, slender sound, on account of the subsequent vowel.

§ 41. No. 2. Here the a has sometimes its long or slender sound, particularly in verbs ending in ate, such as dedi'-cate, edu'-cate, &c. In other parts of speech the sound of the a is more obscure, verging toward short e , as in ul'ti-mate, night'in-gale, &c. In some instances it verges toward short e or i , as in vill'age.

LETTER E.

§ 42. No. 1. Here the final e has its long or open sound, slightly obscure or abridged, as in e-vent', mo'tion, so-ci'e'ty, &c.

§ 43. No. 2. Here also the e has usually its open sound a little shortened and obscured, as in obso-lete, &c. In some instances it verges toward short e , as in college.

LETTER I.

There is great diversity in the case of this letter. Hence it is difficult to lay down general rules; and Smart remarks, "The inquirer must be sent to the Dictionary to learn, in each particular case, the true pronunciation."

§ 44. No. 1. I, when final, has more commonly its short sound, as in phī-lo'so-phy, di-rect, &c. But the i is usually long in the case of initial syllables commencing in i, bi, chi, cli, cri, pri, tri, as in i-de'a, bi-o'l'o-gy, cri-te'-ri-on, pri-me'val, &c.

§ 45. No. 2. In these terminations usage is greatly divided. On the whole, the i is more generally short, as in in'-fi-nite, fer'tile, ad-a-man'tine, &c.; but there are some important exceptions, as ex'ile, gen'tile, con'cu-bine, ste'a-tite, &c. Here the Dictionary must be consulted for the several words.

LETTER O.

§ 46. No. 1. Here the final o has usually its long sound slightly abbreviated, and usually without its "vanish" (see § 18), as in o-pin'ion, mo'to, to-bac'co, &c.

§ 47. No. 2. The o in these terminations has usually its regular long sound, as in tel'e-scope, ep'ode, &c. Sometimes the o verges toward short o , as in dī-a-lōgue, or toward short u , as in pur'pose.

LETTER U.

§ 48. No. 1. Here the final u has its long sound slightly abridged, as in ed'u-cate, mon'u-ment, &c. Hence these words are, thus respelt, ed'y-n-cate, mon'y-ment. But when the u is preceded by r , as in erudition, it drops the y sound, and is pronounced er-oo-di'tion.

§ 49. No. 2. The u in these terminations should retain its regular long or open sound slightly abridged, as in gratitude, institute, literature, &c. Care should be taken never to change these into mere oo , as gratitood for gratitude, institoot for institute.

In some cases the u is more shortened, as, for example, in nature, lecture, feature, &c. The mode of respelling words under this section is the same as in the preceding one, nature being respelt nāt'yur, lecture, lect-yur, &c.

Three cautions are under this head requisite. (1.) Never sink the u into the sound of the short u , making nature, natur, &c. (2.) Never change the letter t into ch, giving nature the sound of nashure or nachoor. (3.) Never insert a j after d , giving educate the sound of educate, &c. The last two peculiarities, though sanctioned by Walker, are now condemned by most orthoepists. Knowles speaks of it as an "absolute vulgarity and absurdity" thus to distort words like educate, &c., from the simplicity of their spelling, by inserting consonant sounds which are entirely out of place.

LETTER Y.

§ 50. No. 1. Here y final has usually its short sound, as in hypo'crisy, my-tho'l'o-gy, &c.; but final syllables in fy and ply have the y long, as in just'i-fy, mul'ti-ply, &c.

§ 51. No. 2. The y in these terminations (which are few in number) is long, as in ne'o-phyte, pros'e-lyte, &c.

SILENT VOWELS.

§ 52. Vowels which are printed in italics are not to be sounded, as the e in used, burden, &c. Some of these cases require a more particular consideration.

EN with E silent.

§ 53. Most words ending in en drop the e, as often (off'n), heaven (heav'n), heathen (heath'n) even (ev'n), &c. One of the most prevalent errors of the present day, especially among our clergy (for the laity have fallen into it much less) is that of pronouncing the word even (evn) evun; heaven (heavn) heavun or heaven; heathen (heathn) heathen or heathun; often (off'n) often, &c. Walker remarks with great keenness on this error, declaring it to be a "puerile and false pronunciation." The following are the only words in which the e should be sounded: Eden, aspen, chicken, hyphen, kitchen, jerken, mitten, patten, platen, sudden, and sloven. The e is also sounded when preceded by the liquids l, m, n, as in woollen; &c., though fallen, stolen, and swollen omit the e.

ON with O silent.

§ 54. Many words ending in on preceded by c, ck, t, &c., omit the e, as in reckon (reck'n), bacon (bak'n), mutton (mut'n), &c.

ED with E silent.

§ 55. The termination ed is usually shortened (by dropping the e) in the preterite of verbs, and in participles in ed, when the e is not preceded by d or t; as in loved (lov'd), proved (prov'd), &c. When d or t precede the e, as in amended, contented, such an omission is impossible. There are, however, a few participial adjectives in which the e is commonly sounded, namely, learned, blessed, cursed, striped, streaked, aged, &c. We do not, therefore, speak of a learn'd man, but of a learned man.

Terminations in EL.

§ 56. As a general rule, the e is sounded in these terminations, as in gravel, level, novel, vessel, chapel, &c. To omit the e in such cases, pronouncing chapel chap'l, novel nov'l, &c., is generally regarded as a vulgarism. The following are nearly all the words of this kind in which the e is properly omitted, viz., drivel, grovel, navel, ravel, rivel, shelkel, shovel, snivel, shrivel, weasel, chattel, mantel, and, according to some, though not many orthoepists model.

CONSONANTS.

§ 57. A part of the consonants, viz., b; d; f; j; k; l, m, p, and w, have one uniform sound, and therefore need no comment in this place. The following consonants however require to be considered; and some additional observations will be found in connection with the respective letters in the Dictionary.

C.

§ 58. C unmarked has the sound of s, as in cede, cinder, ceil, &c.

§ 59. C marked thus C, e, has the sound of k, as in cape, cope, cup, &c.

NOTE.—C (like s and t) takes the sound of sh when immediately preceded by the accent, and followed by ea, ia, io, or ous, as in ocean, social, Phocion, saponaceous.

C has also the sound of z in sacrifice, suffice, and discern, with their derivatives.

CH.

§ 60. Ch unmarked (English ch) has very nearly the sound of tsh, as in chair, child, choose, &c.

NOTE.—Walker and others mark the ch, when preceded by i or n, with the sound of simple sh, respelling filch, filsh, Welch, Welsh, bench, bensh, &c. while Knowles, Smart, and other orthoepists give ch the same sound that it has in rich.

§ 61. Ch marked thus Ch, ch (French ch) has the sound of sh, as in chagrin, chaise, machine, &c.

NOTE.—Most words of this kind are derived from the French. Hence the word chivalry, being from that language, ought regularly to be pronounced shivalry, and not tchivalry, and is so marked by able orthoepists.

§ 62. Ch marked thus CH, eh in words derived from the ancient languages, has the sound of k, as in chasm, character, &c. Ch is always hard (like k) before l and r, as in chlorine, *chris*m, Christian.

NOTE.—When arch, denoting chief, begins a word derived from the Greek, and is followed by a vowel, it is pronounced ark, as archangel, archetype, &c.; but when arch is prefixed to an English word, it has the English sound of ch, as in archbishop, archduke, &c.

G.

§ 63. G unmarked has the hard sound of that letter in the word go, as in gave, give, gun, &c.

NOTE.—In such words as longer, stronger, &c., the g performs a double office: it unites with the preceding n to form the sound of ng, and is again repeated in the subsequent syllable—thus long'ger, strong'ger, &c. To indicate this fact, the character Ng is used in the former syllable. There is another class of words, like sing'ger, in which the g does not thus pass into the subsequent syllable.

In the digraph Gh, at the beginning of words, the h is silent, as in ghost; at the end of words, both letters are commonly silent, as in high, nigh, &c.; in some words, however, it has the sound of f, as in rough, laugh; while ough, at the end of words, has no fewer than seven different sounds, which have been ingeniously combined in the following lines:—

" 'Tis not an easy task to show
How o u g h sound; since though,
An Irish lough, and English slough,
And cough and hiccough, all allow,
Differ as much as tough and through;
Yet none can tell us why they do."

In ght as a termination, gh are always silent; as, fight, right, &c.; except draught, which is pronounced, and, in certain senses, written draft.

§ 64. G marked thus, G g (g soft), has the sound of j, as in gender, general, gaol, &c.

H.

§ 65. This letter is a simple breathing or aspiration, and it is silent at the beginning of many words, as hair, heirss, herb, herbage, honest, honour, honourable, hour, with their derivatives. The h is also marked as silent by most orthoepists in hospital, humour, and humble, with their derivatives. But there is an increasing tendency to sound the h in these words. It is always silent after r, as rheum.

N, NG, and NK.

§ 66. The letter n has a slightly nasal sound; ng and nk are decidedly nasal. The latter are simple elementary sounds, and are not (as might be supposed) a compound sound made up of the letter n in conjunction with g and k. In forming ng the nostrils are not completely closed, but so much so as to produce a marked vibration, which may be continued to any length, as in sing, bring, &c. In forming nk, the nostrils are entirely closed after the first vibration, not allowing the vibration (as in ng) to be further prolonged, as in sink, think. It is therefore undesirable to respell such words as sink, brink, &c., by the use of ng, as they are not so pronounced; for no one sounds sink like sing with a k following, thus sing-k.

PH.

§ 67. This digraph has usually the sound of f, as in phrase, physic, philter, &c. In Stephen it has the sound of v; and, according to most orthoepists, it has the same sound in nephew (new'ev); but in triphthong the h is silent.

Q.

§ 68. Q is always followed by u, and has usually, in connection with that vowel, the sound of kw, as in queen, quail, &c.; but in many words derived from the French, it has the sound of k, as in coquette, etiquette.

R.

§ 69. This letter may be viewed under three aspects:

(1.) Initial r, as in Rome, rip, where it has a jarring, trilling, or rolling sound.

(2.) Final r, as in far, carol, &c., which has a softer sound. The trill here immediately marks the provincial.

(3.) R connected with a guttural sound (called by Smart a "guttural vibration"), as heard in such words as fare, mere, ire, ore, ure, poor, our, &c. Here the character r represents two sounds, viz., an indefinite vowel sound resembling short u, and a partially-formed soft r, so that the above words are pronounced fäur, mäur, iur, &c. Hence the letter r, under these circumstances, is said to have an "opening power:" it brings in an obscure vowel sound, which serves to modify whatever vowel precedes the r, so that Smart says "the vowel sounds in fare, mere, ire, ore, ure, poor, our, do not quite identify with those in fate, mate, ide, ode, cube, pool, owl." See this adverted to in § 4.

S.

§ 70. S unmarked has its regular sharp or hissing sound, as in same, gas, mass, &c.

§ 71. S, when marked thus, ß, ß, has the sound of z, as in has, was, &c.

NOTE.—There has been much diversity among orthoepists as to the sound of s in words commencing in dis, as disarm, disburse, &c. Walker laid down this rule: "It (s) ought always to be pronounced like z when unaccented, and followed by an accented flat mute (b, d, g hard, v), a liquid (l, m, n, r), or a vowel." Hence he gave pronunciation like the following, disbud, disbud; disedify, dizedify; disjoin, dizjoin; dislike, dizlike; dislodge, dizlodge, &c. Scarcely any subsequent orthoepist has gone so far. Webster's Dictionary gives s the sound of s in only the following words, viz., disarm, disaster, discern, disease, disheir, dishonest, dishonour, dismal, dissolve. The Imperial, Craig, and Wright agree almost to a word with Webster. Perry and Knowles give the z sound even in fewer words: Smart gives it in about eight more; Jameson and Boag go still further; but, with one or two exceptions, the orthoepists as a body have condemned the extent to which Walker has gone in this respect.

§ 72. S takes the sound of sh in words ending in sion, preceded by a liquid or another s, as in reversion, passion, &c., together with a few other words such as sure, sugar, censure, nauseate, &c.

§ 73. S has the sound of zh in words ending in sion preceded by a vowel, as in revision, decision, &c., and also in some other words, particularly those in ure, as measure, pleasure, &c.

T.

§ 74. T, like s and c, is aspirated when it immediately follows the accent, and is itself followed by the diphthongs ia, ie, io, as in partial, patient, station, nation, &c.

TH.

§ 75. Th unmarked has its hard sharp or aspirated sound, as in thing, breath, &c.

§ 76. Th marked thus, TH, th, has it flat, soft, or vocal sound, as in this, then, with, &c.

NOTE.—Nouns which, in the singular, end in th sharp, have usually the same ending in the plural, as death, deaths; sabbath, sabbaths, &c.; but the following five words have their plurals in th vocal, viz., bath, lath, mouth, oath, and path, as baths, paths, &c. From this list truth must be carefully excluded.

WH.

§ 77. The true sound of this digraph is obtained by reversing the order of the letters, thus: hw; e. g., when, hwen; while, hwile; whip, hwip. In some the w is silent, as who, whole.

X.

§ 78. This letter has two sounds, viz., its regular sharp sound like ks, as in expect, tax, &c., and its soft or flat sound like gz, as in exert, &c. This latter sound occurs when the syllable which immediately follows the x begins with an accented vowel, as in exert, exalt, example, &c.; but, even in this case, the sound of gz is not always given to the x.

Z.

§ 79. The leading sound of this letter is heard in such words as mass, hazy, &c. In a few words it takes the sound of zh as in seizure (sézhure), azure (azhure).

ACCENT.

§ 80. Accent is the stress that is laid on a particular syllable of a word, which is accordingly said to be accented as in the case of the syllable cent, in the word which has just been used. The placing of this accent not only affects the meaning of the word, but also the sounds both of the vowels and consonants of which the word is composed, and is emphatically indicative of the foreigner and the native, the vulgar and the polite. Thus, with regard to the word character, the Englishman would say char'acter, the Irishman char'acter, and the Frenchman char'acter.

The general tendency of our language is to place the accent on the former syllable of dissyllables, and on the antepenult of polysyllables, or to throw the accent backwards; but there are so many exceptions that this statement can only be regarded as indicating the general tendency of the language. Trisyllables and polysyllables have usually more than one accent; the principal, which alone is commonly marked, is called the primary, the others, the secondary; thus, in alternation, the primary falls on the penultimate, and the secondary on the first syllable of the word. In some words, however, the primary and secondary accents are so nearly of equal force, that they are not unfrequently interchanged, "making," as Walker remarks, "the secondary principal and the principal secondary." He specifies violin, referee, privateer, artisan, courtesan, charlatan, and might have added ambuscade, cavalcade, caricature, etiquette, reverie, confidante, governante, invalid, parachute, and others of foreign origin. Nearly all of these, except the first three, have now (according to able orthoepists) transferred the primary accent from the last to the first syllable, as in artisan, &c., under the operation of a principle which is stated in § 87.

DIVIDED USAGE.

§ 81. In a very large number of words, there is a diversity of practice among good speakers as to the place of the primary accent. This arises mainly from a conflict between certain great principles which affect the seat of the accent. A few of these may now be mentioned, with a view to account for this diversity. It is all that can be done in a brief sketch like this.

§ 82. FIRST PRINCIPLE.—Derivatives take for a time, if not permanently, the accent of their primitives, especially if they are terms of art, as in resolve from resolvō, demon'strate, from demon'stro, ally, from allier. So also research, renounce, abdo'men, acu'men, bitu'men, cura'tor, &c.

§ 83. SECOND PRINCIPLE.—Ease of utterance has some influence in deciding the place of the accent. Acceptable, re'ceptacle, and u'tensil, as fashionable in the days of Walker, have now taken the easier accentuation of accept'able, recept'acle, and uten'sil. Essayist is marked essay'ist by Walker, Webster, and the Imperial, and is given both ways by Worcester. Discrepant, and discrepancy are marked discrep'ant and discrep'an'cy by Richardson, Knowles, Webster, and others. Subaltern (instead of Walker's sub'altern) is the accentuation of Richardson, Knowles, and many more. Confessor has superseded Walker's con'fessor, and has the support of Perry, Ash, Rees, Barclay, Webster, and Worcester. Consistory has given way to consist'ory in the marking of Knowles, Barclay,

Reid, Brande, and others. These may serve as instances of the application of this principle. It is an important one in its place; and, although it may give rise for a time to a diversity of pronunciation, yet changes of this kind, which promote ease of utterance, are likely to prevail.

DISSYLLABLES.

§ 84. THIRD PRINCIPLE.—In words of two syllables, there is a tendency (though with numerous exceptions) to accent the former or penultimate syllable, as in a'gue, bar'on, com'mon, dis'cord, &c.

NOTE.—(1.) This tendency meets with a powerful counteraction in the principle that derivatives retain the accent of their primitives, as in amuse', deter', offend', &c. It is natural, in such formatives, to continue the accent of the original; and hence some hundreds of our dissyllables, especially verbs and adverbs, have their accent on the last syllable.

(2.) Still there is a constant struggle (especially among the common people, who are unacquainted with the derivation of words) to draw back the accent to the first syllable. Here arises another conflict, which produces a diversity of accent; and the common people, being a majority, are, on the whole, slowly gaining upon those who are tenacious of Principle No. 1. Hence con'nate in'nate (instead of connate and innate) are now sanctioned by several orthoepists. Al'cove (for alcove) is given by Webster, while con'tents (for contents) has the sanction of Walker, and Webster, and Worcester; re'tail (for retail) is now the marking of a majority of the orthoepists. De'tail (for deta'il) is less prevalent, but is sanctioned by Smart, Clarke, &c. Pro'lix and pre'text (for prolix and pretext) are not without support. Bom'bast (for bombast) is the accentuation of Walker, Barclay, Richardson, Webster, and Worcester. Bu'reau (for bureau) was admitted by Webster and Worcester, and is very generally applied to the article of furniture, while bureau' is used in reference to a department of the government. Ac'cess (for access) is authorised by a number of orthoepists, especially the later ones. Smart says, "There is a sort of repugnance to an ultimate accent unless on a verb; hence the uninitiated talk of selling con'sols till they learn on the stock exchange that the technical pronunciation is consols," i. e., consolidated stocks.

§ 85. We have about eighty cases among our dissyllables in which the same word is used as a verb on the one hand, and a noun or adjective on the other. To distinguish between them, we accent the nouns and adjectives on the first syllable, and the verbs on the last. As the accent on nearly all these words has long been settled by general usage, it is unnecessary to give the list in full; but the following may be offered to illustrate the principle:—

Nouns or Adjectives.	Verbs.
Ab'ject.	Ab-ject'.

A considerable number of trisyllables are also accented on the first syllable when nouns, and on the last when verbs; for example:—

Nouns.

Coun'tercharm.
In'terchange.
O'vercharge.
Rep'rimeand.

Verbs.

Countercharm'.
Interchange'.
Overcharge'.
Reprimand'.

and many other words, when similarly employed, follow the same analogy, as at'tribute, attri'bute.

§ 86. We have a few dissyllables which are at once nouns and adjectives. These are distinguished by accenting the nouns on the first syllable and the adjectives on the last.

Nouns.

Au'gust, the month.
Com'pact, an engagement
Ex'ile, banishment.
In'stinct, an impulse.
Min'ute, of time.
Sup'ine, in grammar.

Adjectives.

August', noble.
Compact', close.
Exile', slender.
Instinct', filled with.
Minute', small.
Supine', indolent.

The word gallant, however, when it denotes a suitor, or "attentive to females," is accented gallant', and is changed into gallant when it means high-spirited or daring.

TRISYLLABLES AND POLYSYLLABLES.

§ 87. FOURTH PRINCIPLE.—In words of three or more syllables, there is a strong tendency to accent the antepenult, or third syllable from the end, as in elo'quent, ac'cident, oppor'tunity, &c.

NOTE.—This tendency is counteracted by that of derivation; and here arises another "conflict," which, to some extent, arrays our scholars on the one side, and the body of the people on the other. Every scholar, for example, is strongly inclined to say con'tem'plate, demon'strate, con'fiscate, obdu'rate, &c., according to the accent of the Latin; while the mass of the people and others who are governed by English analogies, are equally bent on saying con'tem'plate, dem'onstrate, ob'durate, &c. The latter pronunciation is now very extensively heard, and thus we have a "divided usage" in respect to these and similar words. In like manner, bal'cony (for balco'ny) is now, according to Smart, becoming the true English pronunciation, and is so marked by Knowles, Webster, and many more.

§ 88. There is a number of words which once took the antepenultimate accent, but which are now reverting to an accent on the penult. For example, concord'ance (not con'cordance) is now the settled pronunciation, and so tribun'al (not trib'un'al); in'quiry (not in'quiry); quint'essence (not quint'essence); oppo'nent (not op'ponent); expo'nent (not ex'ponent); compo'nent (not com'ponent); commit'tee (not com'mittee), &c.

§ 89. It is a just principle, laid down by Walker, that "when words come to us whole from the Greek, or Latin, the same accent ought to be preserved as in the original." Hence the following words ought to be accented as here marked, viz., Abdo'men, hori'zon, deco'rum, deco'rous, sono'rous, acu'men, bitu'men, Panthe'on, and, on like grounds, piaz'za, farra'go, and others.

§ 90. TERMINATIONS IN ic.—Terminations in ic

have their accent on the penult, as epidem'ic, so'lentific, &c. The following words are exceptions, having the accent on the antepenult, viz.: ar'senic, arith'metic, bish'opric, cath'olic, chol'eric, ephem'eric, her'etic, lu'natic, pleth'oric, pol'itic, rhe'oric, and tur'meric. Climacteric has usually the antepenultimate accent, though some, as Knowles and Smart, pronounce it climacter'ic. In like manner, empiric, splenetic, phlegmatic, and plethoric, are sometimes accented on the penult and sometimes on the antepenult.

§ 91. TERMINATIONS IN ean.—A part of these terminations follow the English analogy, and take the antepenultimate accent, as ceru'lean, hyperbo'rean, Hercu'lean, Mediterra'nean, subterra'nean, Tarta'rean, murmo'rean. A part accent the penult, as adaman'tean, Atlant'ean, colosse'an, empyre'an, Epicure'an, Europe'an, hymene'al, Pygme'an. Orphe'an, being derived from Orpheus, is more properly accented Orphe'an, although Knowles and Smart prefer the former.

§ 92. Words ending in tude, esy, ify, ety, ity, graphy, logy, loguy, athy, metry, tony, meter, gonal, fluous, fluent, and porous, have the accent on the antepenult; as for'titude, diver'sify, liberal'ity, geol'ogy, baro'meter, ovip'orous, &c.

§ 93. Words of three or more syllables, ending in ulous, inous, erous, and orous, are accented on the antepenult; as, sed'ulous, vol'uminous, vocifer'ous, graminiv'orous; but canorus and sonorous form exceptions.

§ 94. Words of three or more syllables, ending in ative, are accented on the antepenult; as, appel'lative, commu'nivative, spec'ulative; but creative, colla'tive, and dela'tive must be excepted.

§ 95. Words in tive preceded by a consonant, have the accent in the penult: as attra'ctive, vindictive, constructive, invec'tive; but sub'stative and ad'jective are irregular.

§ 96. There is much diversity of practice among orthoepists with respect to adjectives ending in ose: Walker observes that, "from the decided prevalence of the accent on the last syllable of those words, we may easily guess at the analogy of pronunciation;" Smart, however, the "renodeller of Walker," places the accent on the antepenult of a great many of this class of words; and hence we may infer, that the place of the primary accent has not been determined, and that it is of little consequence whether we say ad'ipose or adi'pose, an'helose or anhe'lose, op'eros or opero'se.

§ 97. There is a class of legal terms ending in or and ee, which, when used correlatively, place the accent on the last syllable, evidently with the view of more clearly marking the contrast, thus:—appellor', appellee'; donor', donee'; grantor', grantee'; legator', legatee'; obligor', obligee', and a few more of a similar nature; but, when some of these words are used separately, the accent is brought backward, as in do'nor, &c.

The same principle of contrast affects the seat of the accent in many other words, thus:—"He must in'crease, but I must de'crease;" the charge is not in'clusive, but ex'clusive of extra hours.

§ 98. Those botanical adjectives, ending in phy'lous, might naturally be expected to be similarly accented, and yet several orthoepists neutralize their authority by placing the accent on the penult of some and on the antepenult of others; but, upon the whole, the preponderance of authority is in favour of the antepenult, which is certainly most in accordance with the genius of the language; thus:—heteroph'yllous, macroph'yllous, monoph'yllous, rhizoph'yllous, &c.

ORTHOGRAPHY

AS EXHIBITED IN THIS DICTIONARY.

It is in this department that we have deviated farthest from Dr. Webster. Like some other lexicographers, he laboured to bring the orthography of many exceptional words into conformity to that of many others of similar form or derivation; but, although his practice has been extensively followed in America, it has not met with much favour in this country. As we consider the duty of the lexicographer not so much to reform the orthography of a language as to reflect its condition from the pages of the current literature of his time; so we have endeavoured in this work to exhibit that orthography which prevails in the standard works of the present day. The following, remarks, however, will shew the principles of our present practice with the more remarkable exceptions, as well as indicate what many think desirable to be accomplished in English orthography.

1. Terminations in our. Dr. Webster, in such words as favour, labour, &c., has dropped the u; but, in conformity to present usage in Britain, it has been retained in this work; although, in time, these words will be brought into conformity to many similar words in which the u has been already dropped.

2. Terminations in c and ck. In all monosyllables, as sick, stick, the c is followed by k, and hence, in their compounds, as candle-stick, &c. Words of more than one syllable, ending in ic, or iac, which ended in k in the days of Johnson, have dropped the k, as in music, maniac, &c. In all other terminations the k is retained as in arrack. In a few derivatives, however, to prevent the mistake of making c soft, the k is retained, as in trafficking, mimicking.

3. Terminations in re. Dr. Webster has endeavoured to bring about twenty words ending in re, as centre, metre, into conformity to many others, such as chamber, cider, diameter, by spelling them center, meter, &c.; but even in his hands acre, massacre, huere, and ogre have proved refractory, and the practice has not been generally followed, although, in some of our recent Dictionaries, many of these words are spelled both ways.

4. On doubling the Final Consonant.—It is a rule extending to many hundreds of cases, that, when a word ends in a single consonant, preceded by a single vowel, with the accent on the last syllable, the final consonant is doubled when the common formatives ing, ed, er, are added to the word, as forget, forgetting; blot, blotted; begin, beginner; but if a diphthong precedes the final consonant, or if the accent is on any syllable but the last, the consonant commonly remains single, as load, loaded; tail, toiling; offer, offerer. There are many verbs, however, especially such as end in l, that form exceptions to this rule, apparently from the fear of leading to a mispronunciation of the vowel next the final consonant; thus, level, levelling; pencil, pencilled; model, modeller; travel, traveller. Lowth, Walker, and others have recommended these words to be brought into conformity to the general rule; this has been done by Dr. Webster, but in this work we have spelled them according to the prevailing practice; although there is a considerable number of words of similar termination that conform to the general rule, as barrel, barreling; bigot, bigoted; drivel, driveled, driving, but, inconsistently, driveller. Hence in words ending in l, p, and t, usage is by no means settled.

5. Distinction between Verbs in ize and ise.—Verbs from the Greek $\iota\zeta\omega$, and others formed analogously to them, have the termination ize, as baptize, legalise, &c. Catechise and exorcise are exceptions. Verbs, derived directly from the French -iser, and also some nouns, with a few from other sources, end in ise, as advertise, advise, enfranchise, chastise, circumscribe, comprise, criticise. There is a general tendency, however, among printers at present to dispense as far as possible with s in those terminations in which it was formerly used.

6. Terminations in able.—Able, when incorporated into words ending with silent e, cuts it off, as in blamable, except after c or g, as in noticeable, changeable, lest they should be sounded hard.

7. Defense, offense, and pretense.—In these words s is considered by many preferable to c on the ground of analogy. Originally the following words were spelt thus: expence, recompence, suspense, but have, within comparatively a short period, changed the c into s, for two reasons, viz., (1.), they are derived from Latin words in s, as expensum, &c., and (2.) they have their English derivatives in s, as expensive, &c. The same reasons apply to defense (defensio), with the derivative defensive; offense (offensa), and pretense (pretensum), with the derivatives offensive and pretension. The terms pence and fence, however, are not thus derived, and have no formatives in s.

8. Connection, deflection, inflection, reflection, should follow the spelling of their verbs, connect, &c.

9. Derivatives of dull, skill, will, and full.—It has been suggested that these should retain the ll, to prevent the inconvenience of exceptions to a general rule. Walker says there is no reason why we should not write dullness, fullness, skillful, as well as stiffness, gruffness, &c., but it has not yet been generally done.

10. Derivatives of villain.—The derivatives of villain ought to retain the z, as in villainous, villainy, &c. This is the case in all similar words when the ain is not under the accent, as in mountainous from mountain, captaincy from captain, &c.

11. Woe.—This word takes the final e, like doe, foe, hoe, sloe, toe, and all similar nouns of one syllable. The termination in o belongs, among monosyllables, to the other parts of speech, as go, so, and to nouns of more than one syllable, as motto, potato, &c.

12. Practise, as a Verb.—This verb has been spelled by Dr. Webster like the noun, with a c, as in notice, apprentice, and all similar words in which the accent precedes the last syllable. The distinction of spelling between the noun and verb belongs properly to words accented on the last syllable, as devise, n., devise (pronounced de-vize'), v. To apply the distinction here, and spell the verb practise, tends, it is said, to give it the same pronunciation (prac-tize'). But this spelling, though in opposition to analogy, is still prevalent.

13. Drought and height have now become the established spelling; but drouth and hight were formerly used by eminent writers.

14. Some words, pronounced alike, and probably derived from the very same stock, are spelled differently, that they may be more easily distinguished, as stationery (paper, &c.) and stationary (standing); clue (a guide) and clew (a line); ton (a dry measure) and tun (a wet measure or large hoghead); mantel (chimney-piece) and mantle (a kind of cloak); holiday (a secular festival) and holyday (a religious festival); cue (a hint or guide) and queue (a tie of hair), &c.

KEY

TO THE SOUNDS OF THE POINTED LETTERS.

*. The Key here is repeated for convenience of reference. Those who use this volume will find themselves greatly aided in this respect to the pronunciation if they will devote a single half hour to a thorough examination of the Remarks on the Key.

VOWELS.

REGULAR LONG AND SHORT SOUNDS.

LONG—A ā, as in fame; E ē as in metē; I ī, as in fine; O ō, as in note; OO [Ger. U], as in moon; U ū, as in mute; Y ȳ, as in fly.
SHORT—A ă, as in fat; E ĕ, as in met; I ĭ, as in fin; O ĕ, as in not; OO ōō (short oo), as in foot; U ŭ, as in but; Y ȳ, as in any.

REGULAR DIPHTHONGAL SOUNDS.

PROPER DIPHTHONG OI or OY (unmarked), as in toil, join, foil, boy, coy, toy.
PROPER DIPHTHONG OW (unmarked), as in now, plow. When irregular, the sound is marked, as in tow, sow.
PROPER DIPHTHONG OU (unmarked), as in pound. When irregular, the word is re-spelled, as in route (root).
IMPROPER DIPHTHONGS. In these, the vowel which is sounded is marked, as in aim, clean, cail, people (but this is unnecessary in respect to ee, as in feel). Often they are re-spelled. So also of triphthongs.

PRONUNCIATION.

Respelling for Pronunciation.—(1.) In respelling the French en, on, &c., the letters ng are designed simply to mark the vowel as nasal, and are not to be pronounced themselves.

(2.) The respelling of a word, when a number of related words follow, applies to all of them down to some other word which is respelled.

(3.) Compound words which are not respelled or otherwise marked, are to be pronounced like the simple words of which they are composed; but of and with at the end of compounds, as hereof, herewith, have their final consonant sounded as in doff, smith.

References.—The figures which immediately follow certain words in the vocabulary refer to sections in the Remarks on the Key.

A

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

ABD

I, E, &c., long.—X, &c., short.—CARE, FARE, LIST, FALL, WHAT; THERE, TERM; MARINE, BIRD; MOVE,
DÖVE, WOLF, BOOK; RÖLE, BILL; VI'CIÖUS.—C as K; G as J; S as Z; CH as SH; THIS.

A is the first letter of the alphabet in most known languages. It is probably the first letter, because it represents the first sound naturally made by the human organs of speech.

A, called the indefinite article, is a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon an, one, and is used before words beginning with a consonant, or long u.

A, as a prefix to many English words, is equivalent to the prepositions in or on, as asleep, afloat; and also when used before participles, as a-hunting, a-begging; but in words derived from the Greek, it signifies privation, or negation; as, amorphous; and in those from the Latin, it denotes separation, as, abstract.

AA-RÖNIG, } a. Pertaining to Aaron or his AA-RÖNIG-AL, } priestly office.

AB, a prefix to words of Latin origin denoting separation.

A-BACK, ad. Back, as when the sails of a ship are pressed by the wind against the mast; backward. Taken aback, taken by surprise.

AB-A-CUS, n. The crowning member of a column; a contrivance for computing.

A-BÄFT (6), ad. or prep. Toward the stern of a ship.

AB-ÄL'IEN-ATE, v. t. To transfer the title of property.

A-BÄNDÖN v. t. To give up wholly and finally, or with a view never to resume.—SYN. To relinquish; forsake; desert; surrender; leave; forego.—We leave what we may again resume, as an employment; we abandon what we give up finally, as vice; we relinquish what we have prized or sought, as a claim or hopes; we desert what we ought to adhere to, as duty; we surrender (usually under a necessity) what we have held as our own or in trust, as a fortress; we renounce a thing publicly or as a duty, as allegiance or the world; we forego an enjoyment; we forsake what we have frequented, as society.

A-BÄNDÖNED (ä-bän'dund.) pp. or a. Given up entirely; very wicked.—SYN. Forsaken; deserted; profligate; depraved; corrupt; reprobate.—A reprobate is one so utterly abandoned as to leave no hope of his recovery; a profligate is one who is openly and shamelessly wicked; a man may be corrupt or depraved in heart without showing it in his outward life, and hence he may not be forsaken or deserted by the virtuous.

A-BÄN-DÖN-EE, n. One to whom a thing is abandoned.

A-BÄN-DÖN-ER, n. One who abandons.

A-BÄN-DÖN-MENT, n. Entire desertion; final giving up.

ÄB-ÄR-TIG-U-LÄTION, n. That structure of joints which admits of motion.

A-BÄSE, v. t. To bring low, as to the ground; to cast down; to humble greatly.—SYN. To depress; degrade; reduce; humiliate.

A-BÄSEMENT, n. The act of bringing very low.—SYN. Humiliation; depression; degradation.

—Abasement is a humbling, as of the proud; debasement is a corrupting, as of coin; depression is a sinking down, as of spirits; degradation is a bringing down from a higher rank or grade, as of a peer.

A-BÄSH, v. t. To strike with sudden shame or fear.—SYN. To confuse; confound.—We are confused when we lose our self-possession; we are confounded when our faculties are overwhelmed and brought to a stand.

A-BÄSTING, a. Very humbling.

FOR-GIVE-NESS, n. The overlooking of an offence; removal of anger; disposition to forgive.—SYN. Pardon.—Forgiveness is Saxon, and pardon Norman, both denoting to give back. The word pardon being early used in our Bible, has, in religious matters, the same sense as forgiveness; but in the language of common life there is a difference between them, such as we often find between corresponding Saxon and Norman words. Forgive points to inward feeling, and supposes alienated affection; when we ask forgiveness, we primarily seek the removal of anger. Pardon looks more to outward things or consequences, and is often applied to trifling matters, as when we beg pardon for interrupting a man or for jostling him in a crowd. The civil magistrate also grants a pardon, and not forgiveness. The two words are therefore very clearly distinguished from each other in most cases which relate to the common concerns of life.
FOR-GIVING, a. Pardoning; disposed to pardon; merciful; placable.

IM-ĀG-IN-Ā-TION, n. That power by which we take parts of our conceptions and combine them into new forms and images more select, more striking, more delightful, terrible, &c., than those of ordinary nature; an image formed in the mind.—SYN. Fancy.—These terms are often confounded, but more properly apply to distinct exercises of the same general power—the plastic or creative faculty. Imagination is the higher exercise; it creates by laws more closely connected with the reason; it has strong emotion as its actuating and formative cause; it aims at results of a definite and important character. Milton's fiery lake, the debates of his Pandemonium, the exquisite scenes of his Paradise, are all products of the imagination. Fancy moves on a lighter wing; it is governed by laws of association which are more remote and sometimes arbitrary or capricious; it has for its actuating spirit feelings of a gay, and versatile character; it seeks to please by unexpected combinations of thought, startling contrasts, brilliant imagery, &c. Pope's Rape of the Lock is an exhibition of fancy, which has scarcely its equal in the literature of any country.

Imagination's power creates

IN-DUC'TION (-dûk'shun), n. Literally, a bringing in; hence the establishment of some general truth by bringing a sufficiency of cases to prove it [see below]; formal introduction into office; the quiet passing of electricity without open indication of its presence, &c.—SYN. Deduction. —In induction we observe a sufficient number of facts, and, on the ground of analogy, extend what is true of them to others of the same class, thus arriving at general principles or laws. This is the kind of reasoning employed in physical sciences. In deduction we begin with a general truth, and seek to connect it with some individual case by means of a "middle term," or class of objects known to be equally connected with both. Thus we bring down the general into the individual, affirming of the latter the distinctive qualities of the former. This is the syllogistic method. By induction Franklin established the identity of lightning with electricity; by deduction he inferred that dwellings might be protected by lightning-rods.

IN-DUC'TION-AL, a. Pertaining to induction.

- IN-FECT, v. t. To taint with disease; to contaminate by some secret influence.—SYN. To poison; vitiate; pollute; corrupt.
- IN-FECTION, n. Act of tainting with disease; that which conveys disease by some hidden influence; that which acts by a secret diffusive power, as the infection of evil principles.—SYN. Contagion.—Medical writers in Europe do not, most of them, allow there is any difference between contagion and infection. In America, the distinction referred to under CONTAGION is, to a considerable extent, admitted. In general literature, this distinction is well established. We use contagion and contagious in respect to things which spread by intercourse or imitation, as the contagious influence of example; while we apply infection and infectious to a more hidden and diffusive power, as the infection of vice, the infectious influence of evil principles.
- IN-FEC-TIOUS (-fēk'shus), a. Having power to communicate disease; tending to contaminate by some secret influence; operating by a secret diffusive influence, as joy is infectious.

INFI-DEL, a. Not believing in the Scriptures.

INFI-DEL, n. One who denies the Scriptures and Christianity.—SYN. Unbeliever; free-thinker; deist; atheist; sceptic.—Some have endeavoured to widen the sense of infidel so as to embrace atheism and every form of unbelief, but this has failed. A free-thinker is now only another name for an infidel. An unbeliever is not necessarily a disbeliever or infidel, because he may still be inquiring after evidence to satisfy his mind; the word, however, is more commonly used in the worst sense. A deist believes in one God and a divine providence, but rejects revelation. An atheist denies the being of God. A sceptic is one whose faith in the reliability of evidence is weakened or destroyed, so that religion, to the same extent, has no practical hold on his mind.

IN-FI-DELI-TY, n. Disbelief of the inspiration of the Scriptures; breach of trust; treachery; unfaithfulness, particularly in married persons.

JUSTICE, n. The virtue which consists in giving to every one what is his due; impartiality; vindictive retribution; a civil officer or magistrate.—SYN. Equity; law.—Justice and equity are the same; but human laws, though designed to secure justice, are of necessity imperfect, and hence what is strictly legal is at times far from being equitable or just. Here a court of equity comes in to redress the grievance. It does so as distinguished from courts of law; and as the latter are often styled courts of justice, some have fancied that there is in this case a conflict between justice and equity. The real conflict is against the working of the law; this a court of equity brings into accordance with the claims of justice. It would be an unfortunate use of language which should lead any one to imagine he might have justice on his side while practising iniquity (inequity).

- LEYDEN-JAR, } (lɔ'dn-), { n. A jar used to accumulate electricity, first used at Leyden.
- LI-A-BLE, a. Exposed to something evil; bound in law or equity; responsible.—SYN. Subject.—LIABLE denotes something external which may befall us; subject refers to evils which arise from internal constitution, and are likely to do so. Hence the former applies more to what is accidental, the latter to things from which we often or inevitably suffer. Every one, from his temperament, is subject to certain diseases, while he is liable to be attacked by many others.
- LI-A-BLE-NESS, } n. A state of being liable; responsibility; exposedness; tendency.
- LI-A-BILI-TY, } sponsibility; exposedness; tendency.

- LI-BER-AL, a. Having a large and free spirit; not contracted or mean; ample; not literal or unduly strict, as a liberal construction; embracing elegant culture, as the liberal arts; free to excess.—SYN. Generous.—Liberal is free born, and generous is high born. The former is opposed to the ordinary feelings of a servile state, and implies largeness of spirit in giving, judging, acting, &c. The latter expresses that nobleness of soul which is peculiarly appropriate to those of high rank—a spirit that goes out of self, and finds its enjoyment in consulting the feelings and happiness of others. Generosity is measured by the extent of the sacrifices it makes; liberality by the warmth of feeling which it manifests.
- LI-BER-AL, n. One who advocates greater freedom, especially in politics.
- LI-BER-AL-ISM, n. Liberal principles.
- LI-BER-AL-I-TY, n. Largeness of mind; generous conduct; candour.

- LI-BER-TINE, a. Licentious; dissolute.
- LI-BER-TIN-ISM, n. Licentiousness of life.
- LI-BER-TY, n. Exemption from restraint or compulsion; a privilege or immunity.—SYN. Freedom.—These words, though often interchanged, are distinct in some of their applications. Liberty has reference to previous restraint, freedom to the simple, spontaneous exercise of our powers. A slave is set at liberty; his master had always been in a state of freedom. A prisoner under trial may ask liberty [exemption from restraint] to speak his sentiments with freedom [the spontaneous and bold utterance of his feelings]. The liberty of the press is our great security for freedom of thought.
- LI-BIDI-NOUS, a. Eager for venereal pleasures.—SYN. Lustful; licentious; impure; sensual; lecherous.
- LI-BIDI-NOUS-LY, ad. Lustfully; in a lustful manner.
- LI-BIDI-NOUS-NESS, n. Inordinate desire for or indulgence in venereal gratification.

- LI-CTOR, n. A Roman officer; a beadle.
- LID, n. A cover for a pot, chest, &c.; cover of the eye, or eye-lid.
- LIE, n. A false statement intended to deceive.—SYN. Untruth.—A man may state what is untrue from ignorance or misconception, but to say he lies is to charge him with the highest dishonour; hence the word untruth is sometimes used as a softened expression when we do not wish to make the charge of lying in the grossest form.
- LIE, v. t. To utter falsehood for the sake of deceiving.
- LIE, v. i. [pret. LAY, pp. LAIN.] To be at rest in a horizontal position; to stay or remain; to be sustained in law, as an action will lie; to be situated.—SYN. To lay.—Lay is a transitive verb, and has for its preterit laid, as "He told me to lay it down, and I laid it down." Lie is intransitive, and has for its preterit lay, as, "He told me to lie down, and I lay down." Some persons blunder by using laid for the preterit of lie, as, "He told me to lie down, and I laid down." So persons often say, "The ship laid at anchor," "they laid by during the storm," "the book laid on the shelf," &c. It is only necessary to remember, in all such cases, that laid is the preterit of lay, and not of lie. This would save many respectable writers from a gross error which seems to be increasing among us.
- LIEF (leef), ad. With free consent; gladly; willingly; freely.
- LIEGE (leej), n. A sovereign; a vassal; a bound by a feudal tenure; subject; faithful.

LIKE-LI-HOOD, n. Appearance of truth or reality; probability.

LIKELY, a. Appearing true or real; probable; having good qualities; ad. probably.

LIKEN (lik'n), v. t. To make like; to compare.

LIKE-NESS, n. Similarity in appearance or qualities; counterpart; a picture, &c., resembling a person or thing.—SYN. Resemblance; parallel; analogy; portrait; effigy; representation.

LIKE-WISE, ad. In like manner; moreover.—SYN. Also; too.—Like-wise (like and wise) always signifies (with greater or less obviousness) in like manner. Also (all and so) implies that what is thus subjoined may be said with [all] the same truth and propriety as that which preceded. Too (to) signifies that what follows may be added to what was said before. Hence too gives a slighter and more familiar connection than also, and like-wise a more marked one, as in the following sentence: "I may add, too, that there were also others present who like-wise shared in the commission of the act."

LIKING, n. Inclination; appetency; appearance of health.
